Persona A

GOALS

- Get a fast, accurate answer to a specific, timely question
- Know a rule or deadline before it costs something
- Avoid tracking down one specific person and hoping they reply

NEEDS

- One low-friction place to ask a question — academic or logistical
- A reliable, current answer without needing an existing network

FRUSTRATIONS

- Info exists somewhere at AUI but is scattered across portal, offices, people's heads
- Admin answers are often incomplete or inconsistent
- No single trustworthy channel — faculty don't even have a fallback group

Persona A represents both students and faculty facing something for the first time — e.g. a new professor relocating to Ifrane with family faces the same access problem in a different form (schools, groceries, HR).

GOALS

- Share what she knows once, reaching more than one student
- Be recognized as reliable without being expected to be infallible
- Correct misinformation before it spreads further

NEEDS

- A way to contribute an answer once and have it resurface automatically
- A lightweight way to flag or update info that turns out wrong

FRUSTRATIONS

- Answers the same 2-3 questions repeatedly, one person at a time
- Treated as the single source of truth on high-stakes topics
- No formal channel credits or scales what she already does for free

AGE

LOCATION
Ifrane, Morocco

GOALS

- Find reliable, non-student-specific local knowledge quickly
- Avoid costly, avoidable mistakes from unwritten local rules
- Settle his family with minimal disruption

NEEDS

- An entry point into local knowledge that doesn't assume he's a student
- A channel that doesn't require an existing peer network

FRUSTRATIONS

- Every "everyone knows this" fact must be rediscovered from zero
- Shorter stay means barely any time to build a network
- Nearly all informal channels are built for students, not staff

Word of mouth

Persona C is a reasoned extrapolation (no direct interview data) — useful for pressure-testing whether the concept holds beyond student life.
